Review Summary

The University of Bahrain (UoB) is the largest public higher education institution in the Kingdom of Bahrain. Since its inauguration in 1986, the University has grown in terms of constituent colleges, study programmes across all academic levels and student enrolments. This expansion and diversification of UoB has taken full account and guidance from government entities and the economic development vision articulated for Bahrain. UoB staff are fully aware of their responsibilities and there is a strong spirit of loyalty across alumni and students, and pride in belonging to the UoB community.

Following a period of wide consultation with UoB stakeholders and government entities, the University has a refreshed and clear vision, mission and strategic plan supported by the newly constituted Board of Trustees (BoT). The central strategic plan focusses on the employability of graduates and supporting the Bahrain Economic Vision 2030 through expanded activities in research and community engagement. It has cascaded down through the revised organisational structure to produce operational plans to guide activities and initiatives in all units. Moving forward the University should ensure that a robust monitoring and reporting strategy is developed.

The BoT has recently been reformed under new chairmanship. There is an evident separation between governance and day-to-day management, and the new membership brings together a wide range of high-level expertise and experience to the UoB portfolio. The BoT has established sub-committees for academic oversight and for audit and financial matters, and an executive committee will be established to facilitate timely decision making and action. In addition, the University plans to generate funding through its activities, services, and external sources to upgrade engineering and science laboratories, expand sport facilities, and improve access for students and staff with special needs throughout its campuses.

The University has a revised and appropriate organisational structure, which has not yet been officially approved or implemented. The current committee and council structure are comprehensive and engage internal and external stakeholders in a wide range of institutional and college-level decision making. However, the terms of reference for all committees, including BoT sub-committees, need to be detailed for clarity on membership, quorum, voting procedures, terms of office, etc. Each committee should also be periodically reviewed for its effectiveness.

The University follows a human resources strategy guided by national regulations and its institutional vision, mission, and policies. UoB offers robust staff induction and professional development, including AdvanceHE fellowships, workshops, and training for academic and non-academic staff. Faculty recruitment is currently limited to the UoB website, but broader outreach through international platforms could enhance the process. UoB faces staffing challenges such as increased faculty workloads due to rising student numbers and stagnant hiring over the past four years. However, UoB has significant recruitment plans outlined for 2024-2026. The University would benefit from expediting the implementation of these plans, attracting high-calibre senior faculty, and reducing teaching overloads. This will ensure a balanced distribution of senior and junior academic staff and their responsibilities in teaching, research, scholarly activity, consultancy, community engagement, and academic administration, thereby strengthening UoB's research portfolio.

UoB has a comprehensive quality assurance management system aligned with its mission and objectives, with clearly defined academic and administrative staff roles. However, UoB's policies and regulations, including those related to human resources management, are primarily in Arabic, and there are some inconsistencies in policy implementation across programmes, particularly in assessment, moderation, and tracking student progression. This indicates the need for better communication and monitoring. Staff and other stakeholders would benefit from consolidating all policies and regulations on a single webpage in both Arabic and English, with standardized formats including titles, scope, and review dates. Benchmarking and stakeholder feedback are well-utilized for programme improvements and professional development, but there is limited evidence of benchmarking other core activities like research output, quality, impact, and community services. Benchmarking policies and procedures would also ensure alignment with regional and international practices.

The University has a comprehensive resource management approach focusing on suitability, sufficiency, security, and health and safety. There are plans in progress for further expansion of facilities. UoB's central library and branches provide extensive physical and online resources to which staff and students have access. The Student Information System (SIS) is widely utilised to ensure efficient data management and reporting for informed decision making and is integrated with the learning management system for seamless workflow and enhanced learning experiences. There is also a robust and secure Information and Communications Technology (ICT) environment that supports UoB educational and administrative missions.

The University has appropriate arrangements that include provision for academic leadership at programme and individual course level. The design of new academic programmes involves internal and external stakeholders, market studies, benchmarking and surveys. Current academic programmes undergo rigorous and thorough annual and periodic reviews, with the development of operational plans at programme level, highlighting actions for improvement. Information on academic programmes, admission criteria and requirements are clearly accessible to both undergraduate and graduate students. Admission criteria are annually reviewed on a case-by-case basis and changes approved by the University Council. Appropriate arrangements are administered at departmental and institutional levels to manage student needs including, handling inquiries, transfers, appeals and foundational studies. Students' information, records and certificate issuance are effectively managed by the Department of Admission and Registration and ICT services.

The University has established a robust framework of teaching and learning policies supporting diverse instructional methods, including e-learning, practical learning, and traditional classroom teaching. These policies promote quality teaching and learning across the University by facilitating the achievement of learning outcomes. To monitor and review teaching effectiveness, the institution uses mechanisms such as surveys, which provide valuable insights and consider students' perspectives for continuous improvement. Additionally, UoB has sought external validation through international accreditations, offering a structured mechanism to review and enhance teaching strategies and learning outcomes through rigorous external evaluations. While assessment and moderation policies and procedures are well-established, as evidenced by comprehensive course syllabi and portfolios, their effectiveness could be enhanced by systematically evaluating the application of these policies and ensuring instructors consistently adhere to the published guidelines.

The research strategy demonstrates alignment with the Kingdom of Bahrain's national research strategy by focusing on key areas such as financial services, health services, and ICT, and showcasing collaborations with established international universities. Efforts to support research are evident, but gaps remain in diversifying funding sources and expanding industry collaboration, which are crucial for advancing UoB to a prominent research institution. The lack of a centralised research ethics committee and a formalised mechanism to assess the impact of research on teaching and learning weakens oversight and integration. Supervision policies follow the guidelines of the Higher Education Council (HEC), but variability in departmental practices and limited supervisor accessibility require attention.

Community engagement at UoB is suitably aligned with UoB's mission of serving the local community and in developing effective partnerships locally, regionally and internationally. The University launched several initiatives, and with the support of the Community Service and Continuing Education Center (CSCEC), is seeking to maintain and enhance its local and international footprint. The Career Counselling Office plays a crucial role in connecting students and graduates with the industrial sector; it also engages in workshops and career fairs on campus. In addition, the Alumni Club plays a major role in strengthening UoB's engagement with the community with the main aim of raising graduate employment rates. There is a high level of regional and international links, including collaboration with the European Council for Nuclear Research and the secretariat general of the Gulf Cooperation Council. Performance indicators, achievement reports, data analytics and surveys are consistently employed to measure the level of success of community engagement activities.

Effective academic and non-academic support services are in place at UoB. Prospective students are properly briefed on the nature and requirements of the programmes and scholarships on offer, and new students are appropriately inducted into the University and their programme. Students at risk of academic failure are supported and identified through SIS and academic advisor interventions. Some reasonable accommodation is made for students with special needs, but further enhancement could be made by reviewing alternative learning modalities for such students. There is a range of non-academic support services related to counselling, health, and welfare. Students have access to career information, advice and guidance from the Department of Guidance and Counselling, and through faculty, who commit to access by students outside timetabled sessions. The onsite health clinic for staff, students and visitors enhances the overall campus experience by addressing health concerns promptly and efficiently. The University also demonstrates commitment to student engagement in wider social, recreational, community and cultural pursuits, and proactively engages with its alumni and encourages their interaction with current students to provide support, mentoring and career advice. There are several initiatives, such as Competency Transcript, which enhance graduate employability and student skills.

The University is evidently in a transition phase, moving from a dominantly teaching-led institution to an outward looking research-based university with active international linkages and a growth in graduate level programmes. The employability of graduates is driving the core activities and operational plans. The challenge for UoB is to establish a sustainable financial situation with diverse income streams that will enable the ambitions expressed in the strategic plan to be realised in the anticipated time frame.

Commendations

1. The development processes for the UoB strategic plan and subsequent operational plans, have included all UoB stakeholder groups, with appropriately given consideration to Sustainable Development Goals and the Bahrain Economic Vision 2030.
